COLLEGE READY TEACHES STUDENTS TO HELP OTHERS THROUGH FINDING A PASSION

College Ready Founder Shellee Howard inspires high school students to fulfill community services hours a Passion Project

LAGUNA BEACH, CA (Sept. 6, 2018) – College Ready Founder and Certified Educational Planner Shellee Howard believes that every student is unique and comes with their own distinctive gifts and talents. She, and her staff, supports her student's in exploring what makes them special and guides them in the process of fulfilling 200-hours of community service in the form of a Passion Project.

"The College Ready "Passion Project" teaches so much more than just community service," said Shellee. "It is one of the strategies that makes College Ready stand out from other college consultant companies. The Passion Project teaches leadership, teamwork, tenacity, determination, initiation and helps the student explore his or her gifts and talents."

Not all community service is weighed the same. Shellee helps students not only identify their passion, but also use that passion to make a difference in their community or worldwide. "It is no longer enough to have a high GPA and incredible test scores," said Shellee. "Colleges are looking for well-rounded students who will be successful at their college and are creative, forward thinkers wanting to stand out from the crowd and make a difference."

Shellee has seen students' passions help them determine what they want to study in college, what type of career they want to pursue, what impact they want to have on the world, what it means to help others, and more.

Every student who signs with College Ready does more than just show up to a service event, they create the service event and every project is unique.
